

Isaac Rosenberg

(1890-1918)

Life and works

Isaac Rosenberg was born in 1890 into a working-class Jewish family that had emigrated to the East End of London from Lithuania. Although economic difficulties prevented him from attending Oxford or Cambridge, he was a talented artist and managed to enroll at the prestigious Slade School of Fine Art in London. He hoped to make his living as a portrait artist, when the war broke out. He enlisted in 1915 and was killed at the front on 1st April 1918.

Rosenberg differs from the other War Poets not only for his poor background. His poems may be regarded as modernist in technique. His vision of the war was unsentimental and less concerned with the pity of things; he presented realistic and shocking details, sometimes with a touch of irony or through paradox and contrast. His use of language was 'scriptural and elemental', as Sassoon described it. His finest poems were published in Collected Works in 1937.

Break of Day in the Trenches

The poem presents an insight into the life in the trenches and it is an example of how a trivial event may lead to a painful reflection.

Collected Poems
(1937)

The darkness crumbles away.
It is the same old druid<sup>1</sup> Time as ever,
Only a live thing leaps my hand,
A queer sardonic rat,
5 As I pull the parapet's poppy<sup>2</sup>
To stick behind my ear.
Droll<sup>3</sup> rat, they would shoot you if they knew
Your cosmopolitan sympathies.
Now you have touched this English hand
10 You will do the same to a German
Soon, no doubt, if it be your pleasure
To cross the sleeping green between.
It seems you inwardly<sup>4</sup> grin as you pass
Strong eyes, fine limbs, haughty athletes<sup>5</sup>,
15 Less chanced than you for life,
Bonds to the whims<sup>6</sup> of murder,
Sprawled in the bowels<sup>7</sup> of the earth,
The torn fields of France.
What do you see in our eyes
20 At the shrieking iron and flame
Hurled through still heavens<sup>8</sup>?
What quaver – what heart aghast?
Poppies whose roots are in man's veins
Drop<sup>9</sup>, and are ever dropping;
25 But mine in my ear is safe –
Just a little white with the dust.
